

It has been a volatile week for equities, with greater concerns on US equities' valuations, particularly in the technology sector. Market participants also scaled back expectations that the US Federal Reserve will cut rates in December. The bulk of the flows in US equities came from US domiciled funds. EM and Europe equities exposures gathered further assets. In Fixed Income, flows were directed into US short term debt exposures alongside EUR IG corporate debt.

Capture EU's future growth with Strategic Autonomy

European equities have been under the spotlight this year, delivering strong performance. Signs of a bottoming out in activity in Europe, an attractive risk premium compared with the US and a more general shift towards greater EU independence, have been key tailwinds. There is also a strong rebound in investor interest, with inflows into European equities well ahead of previous years.

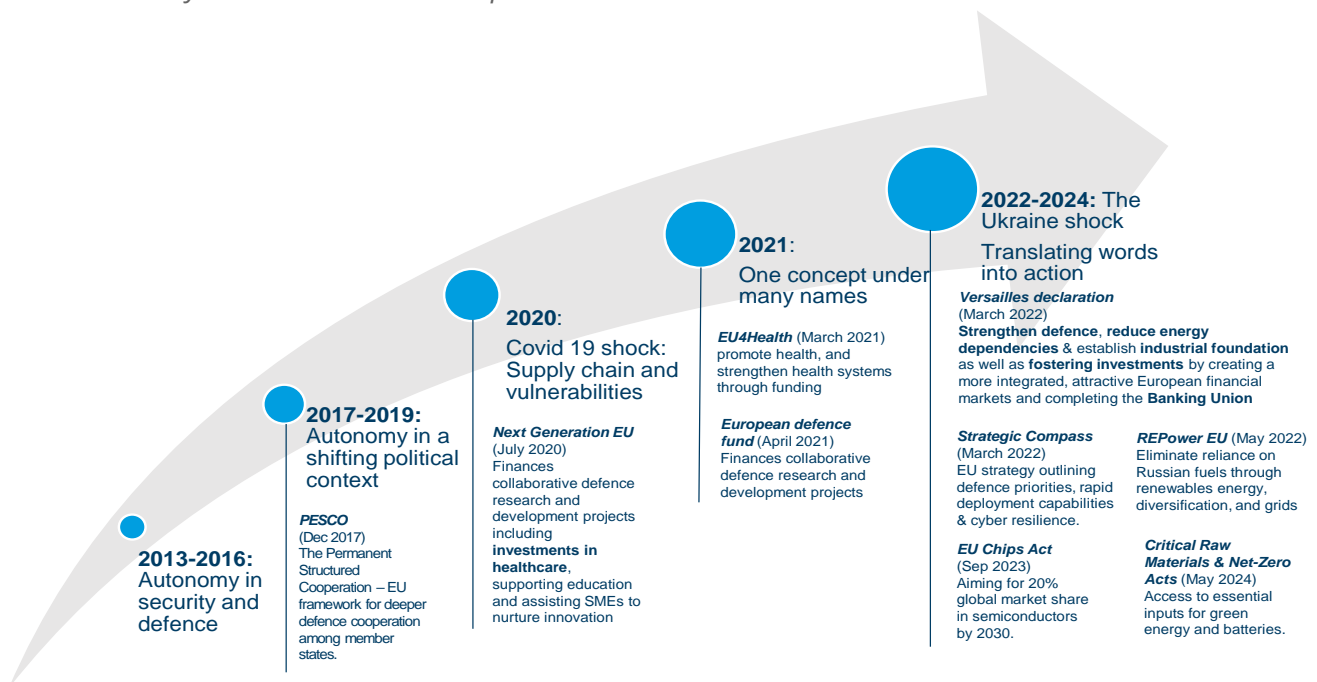

While growth is modest, reforms in Europe are advancing, and the new German fiscal stance is a game-changer. The aim is to redirect industrial policy towards energy, infrastructure and defence to foster strategic autonomy. While these measures may not immediately lift growth, they could transform the European macro-financial ecosystem in the medium term, enabling a sustainable economic recovery. That, in turn, could strengthen demand for European assets over the longer run.

Strategic autonomy in Europe: from concept to capacity

Europe's bid for strategic autonomy has gained traction over the past decade and now encompasses a broad scope of priorities, which extend well beyond defence issues. This multi-faceted approach not only includes investments in the EU's defence capabilities but also promotes European technological competitiveness, alongside deeper economic and industrial policies.

Among the most significant initiatives are those focused on defence, energy, technology and healthcare. In defence, the ReArm Europe and Readiness 2030 initiatives mark a major reinvestment effort, with member states planning to mobilise around €800 billion to rebuild Europe's defence and security capabilities. In energy, the REPowerEU plan, supported by €300 billion in funding, seeks to accelerate the clean energy transition and reduce dependency on imported fossil fuels. This builds on the broader Next Generation EU programme, which channels recovery funds into green and digital infrastructure. The EU's Chips Act, worth €43 billion, aims to double Europe's share of global semiconductor production by 2030 and restore control over critical technology supply chains. In healthcare, the EU4Health programme is investing around €5 billion between 2021 and 2027 to strengthen Europe's preparedness for future health emergencies. Together, these initiatives reflect a clear policy direction: building a more self-reliant, competitive and secure Europe that can withstand global shocks and lead in strategic industries.

Introducing the Euronext Strategic Autonomy index⁴

For investors, this policy shift opens a range of potential new opportunities. Strategic autonomy is driving multi-year investment in industries linked to defence, energy transition, infrastructure, technology and healthcare. Companies supplying renewable energy systems, grid infrastructure, semiconductors, cybersecurity or advanced materials are likely to benefit as Europe channels vast public and private capital into these areas. The Euronext Strategic Autonomy index⁴ was built to identify and access the full ecosystem supporting Europe’s future competitiveness.

The index aims for allocation across ten key themes that capture public investment momentum and EU priorities and provides diversified² access to the full ecosystem supporting Europe’s future competitiveness. The index aims to capture established leaders and emerging specialists that may be underrepresented in traditional benchmarks. To do so, the thematic screening focuses on companies that generate at least 50% of their revenues from one of the ten themes that have been defined according to FactSet RBICS activities – a detailed taxonomy used to classify companies based on their products and services.

Each theme is set at 10% at review in March and September and within each theme, companies are weighted in proportion to their free-float market capitalisation. By structure, the index bears a strong diversification² be it via sector exposures but also by market capitalisation exposure.

When assessing the monthly contribution of each theme to broad index performance¹ we note that the index’s performance¹ has been driven by the outperformance¹ of various themes at different times throughout the year — for instance, aerospace and defence and financials mostly in the first half of the year. From May onwards, power grid and equipment, and semiconductors were greater contributors to overall performance¹. This suggests some degree of rotation of the index’s underlying drivers of performance¹ over time.

⁵Diversification does not guarantee a profit or protect against a loss.

A well-diversified⁵ thematic play spanning across countries, industries and size

The index's methodology⁴ aims to avoid strong concentration in specific markets in the European Economic Area. It also includes exposure to Nordic countries such as Denmark, Norway and Sweden.

It also offers a greater tilt towards industrials and technology compared to the broader market. The index's methodology⁴ is not limited to a few sectors such as defence and banks and encompasses a broader range of industries. A single theme can span multiple sectors, and conversely, each sector can contribute to several themes. The index's exposure to various themes also allows a greater representation of smaller capitalisation companies, with 85 out of 231 index constituents included (close to 40% of the total number of index constituents and ~4.9% of total index weight as at 30/09/2025 according to Euronext calculation). Including exposure to smaller capitalisation companies allows for stronger representation across emerging, strategic and industrial sectors, such as aerospace and defence, logistics, but also infrastructure and semiconductors, which are critical areas for Europe's growth. The exposure to small capitalisations has been a source of consistent return¹ so far this year.

While the index shows a greater bias towards industrials and tech, the pool of thematic options remains well diversified⁵ by structure as the thematic screening focuses on companies that generate at least 50% of their revenues from one of the ten themes. Average correlation between sub-themes is around 0.56, highlighting diversification⁵ benefits (analysis based on Euronext data as at 14/10/2025).

To conclude, European strategic autonomy is a secular investment narrative, durable, diversified⁵, and grounded in real economic transformation. It offers the opportunity to combine thematic growth exposure with characteristics suited to core allocation: scalability, depth and a focus on companies fundamental to Europe's future prosperity. With the Euronext European Strategic Autonomy index⁴, investors could position portfolios to explore the potential of one of the most significant structural themes shaping Europe today and into the future.

Knowing your risk

It is important for potential investors to evaluate the risks described below and in the fund's Key Investor Document ("KID") and prospectus available on our website www.amundiETF.com.

CAPITAL AT RISK

ETFs are tracking instruments. Their risk profile is similar to a direct investment in the underlying index. Investors' capital is fully at risk and investors may not get back the amount originally invested.

UNDERLYING RISK

The underlying index of an ETF may be complex and volatile. For example, ETFs exposed to Emerging Markets carry a greater risk of potential loss than investment in Developed Markets as they are exposed to a wide range of unpredictable Emerging Market risks.

REPLICATION RISK

The fund's objectives might not be reached due to unexpected events on the underlying markets which will impact the index calculation and the efficient fund replication.

COUNTERPARTY RISK

Investors are exposed to risks resulting from the use of an OTC swap (over-the-counter) or securities lending with the respective counterparty(-ies). Counterparty(-ies) are credit institution(s) whose name(s) can be found on the fund's website amundiETF.com. In line with the UCITS guidelines, the exposure to the counterparty cannot exceed 10% of the total assets of the fund.

CURRENCY RISK

An ETF may be exposed to currency risk if the ETF is denominated in a currency different to that of the underlying index securities it is tracking. This means that exchange rate fluctuations could have a negative or positive effect on returns.

LIQUIDITY RISK

There is a risk associated with the markets to which the ETF is exposed. The price and the value of investments are linked to the liquidity risk of the underlying index components. Investments can go up or down. In addition, on the secondary market liquidity is provided by registered market makers on the respective stock exchange where the ETF is listed. On exchange, liquidity may be limited as a result of a suspension in the underlying market represented by the underlying index tracked by the ETF; a failure in the systems of one of the relevant stock exchanges, or other market-maker systems; or an abnormal trading situation or event.

VOLATILITY RISK

The ETF is exposed to changes in the volatility patterns of the underlying index relevant markets. The ETF value can change rapidly and unpredictably, and potentially move in a large magnitude, up or down.

CONCENTRATION RISK

Thematic ETFs select stocks or bonds for their portfolio from the original benchmark index. Where selection rules are extensive, it can lead to a more concentrated portfolio where risk is spread over fewer stocks than the original benchmark.
